Foreword

The purpose of this booklet is to indicate the forest products for which markets exist and to show who buys them in each locality. The information presented is the result of a county-by-county canvass of buyers conducted by the Southeastern Forest Experiment Station and the Florida Forest Service during the last half of 1949. It is published as a contribution under Title II of the Research and Marketing Act of 1946.

The author and all the others who participated in the project wish to thank the buyers, plant owners, and managers whose cooperation made the publication possible. Any omissions are unintentional and reflect in no way on the companies or individuals left out. By the same token, inclusion in the directory does not constitute a recommendation.

MARKETS FOR FOREST PRODUCTS IN FLORIDA

INTRODUCTION

Nearly every woodland owner who maintains a satisfactory stand of growing trees on his land has an opportunity to gain a regular periodic income from sales of forest products. To take full advantage of his opportunity, he must sell his products in the form and to the market that will net the largest return without overcutting or otherwise injuring the prospects for future sales. If he has trees suitable for poles, for instance, he needs to know who is buying poles and how much they are paying; similarly with saw timber, veneer timber, etc. By talking to the various buyers he can then decide what product to sell and to whom. Under no circumstances should he cut any forest product unless he has an order for it and understands the buyer's requirements. Many a timber owner has cut products for which there was no demand at the time, or has cut lengths or grades that did not suit the needs of local plants.

There are said to be over 4,000 commercial and industrial uses for wood. Even the smallest timber tract may contain material suitable for a variety of commodities, depending on the species present and on such individual tree characteristics as size, form, soundness, limbiness, and rate of growth. But, in Florida, logs and bolts are not the only salable products of the forest. Production of naval stores gum from long-leaf and slash pines is an important activity, for instance, while original-growth stumps of these species are in demand for wood naval stores. In some areas, plants make novelties from cypress knees, and even Spanish moss is dried and processed for use as packing or for stuffing upholstery.

The chief consumer of forest products is the lumber industry. During 1948, the latest year for which figures are available, 695 sawmills in Florida and in border countries of neighboring states sawed 547 million board feet of Florida logs into lumber. Of this total 78 percent was pine, 16 percent cypress, and 6 percent mixed hardwoods. Next in importance is the veneer industry, with 39 plants and a consumption of over 86 million board feet, largely gums, sweetbay, magnolia, and pine. Most of its output is sold in the form of baskets, boxes, and hampers for shipping the State's fruit and vegetable crops. Other leading consumers are the cooperage and pulp and paper industries. In 1948, 5 stave mills drew 10½ million board feet of logs and bolts from Florida forests, while 16 pulp mills obtained nearly 1¼ million cords of pulpwood there. The table shows the principal uses made of Florida timber in 1948. Unfortunately, similar statistics of crude gum production are not available.

Production of rough timber products in Florida, 1948

Product	Unit of Measure	Quantity
Sawlogs	Million board feet, Int. $\frac{1}{4}$ "	546.9
Veneer logs	Million board feet, Int. $\frac{1}{4}$ "	86.2
Cooperage bolts	Million board feet, Int. $\frac{1}{4}$ "	10.5
